Sacrifice, Not Waste

By the Rev. Raymond Lee Wolven
Rector of the Church of the Ascension

Excerpted from the Washington Post or Evening Star, 1944

Many men and women today are in a state of sullen and rebellious confusion over what appears to them to be a senseless and wasteful squandering of all that is best and finest in our civilization.

Not long ago we were talking with a woman whose husband, a young officer in the Navy, had lost his life in action in an airplane. This lady and her young daughter were not only grief-stricken, but embittered by what they could see only as tragic and futile waste and destruction. “Why,” she asked, “should this have happened to my husband, who was so fine, so valuable, and who had so much to give to the world? Why was it not some one who better could be spared? He could have sent some one else on this particular mission, but he would not do it.”

We tried to comfort her by saying that this gallant officer would not have been so fine as he was if he had saved himself by avoiding danger and sending another in his place.

But as we left the house, the question kept pressing for an answer. Is the sacrifice of so much brave young life unrelieved and senseless tragedy and waste, and nothing else? Is it without meaning and without reason?

And then we thought of Calvary and the crosses that were raised on that green hill far away. Somehow we began to understand a little how it is only the best that can offer the effectual sacrifice. God's own Son, the Perfect Being, was the only one whose sacrifice could save the world. “There was no other good enough to pay the price of sin.”

The two thieves, crucified with Him, could not save the world. They came to their end through the course of human frailty. But He knew no sin. His was the perfect life. He paid the price because he would not save Himself. He would not compromise with evil. He was the young Prince of Glory, the finest and the best. He alone could save the weak, the sinful human race.

It always has been so. The world always has been helped by the sacrifice of the best, the strongest, the bravest. It is the high privilege of the flower of humanity to give itself for the lesser, the weaker and the sinful.

This sacrifice of the best is not waste. It is the planting of a seed which will come to life and fruit in a world full of gladness, peace and salvation, instead of its present darkness, terror and confusion. The sacrifice of the best of your race today is akin to that of the Lamb of God, who after He had laid down His life for His friends, rose again on Easter, triumphant and vindicated, bringing the assurance of the victory that must come, of truth over falsehood, of right over wrong, of love over hate.
