From the Rector

The Last Sunday in Pentecost. This Sunday is always a bit of a shock to me. We know that Advent is around the corner, therefore I am unprepared to end on this note in the Gospel. Why is it in the midst beginning a new Church year, and perhaps in the anxiety of holiday preparations, do we find ourselves at the foot of the cross? I mention this, because as we come to the end of the church year, we are asked to remember that Jesus, when all is said and done, is our Lord and Savior, based upon this humiliating reality of a crucifixion.

Just about everyone there, from the guards and the Pharisees, to the thief on the cross next to him, taunted Jesus, saying to him: "If you are the messiah, if you are the king, then save yourself - and save us." It is pretty obvious from the gospel story that none of these people recognized Jesus for who he was: And this - it seemed - meant to them that they could abuse him as they might abuse any convicted criminal.

To them - nothing special was going on - it was business as usual, business without thinking, business without considering what it was that God would want out of them whether or not this man on the cross was the Messiah - or simply a misguided fool. I believe certainly, that if those who acted this way at the foot of the cross could come back and stand before Christ again - as we stand before him – they would act a totally different way: But there had been a lot of foreshadowing, and they were warned.

The prophet Isaiah said this...

“He had no form of majesty that we should look at him, nothing in his appearance that we should desire him - and so it was he was despised and rejected by others, a man of suffering and acquainted with grief.”
